PRE-SEASON F.BMW TESTING

Previous seasons have demonstrated that in order to be competitive from the first event a driver must undertake pre-season testing. A minimum of ten days is recommended. Under the series regulations a test ban will come into force approximately one month prior to the first event of 2010 therefore drivers must plan ahead to ensure they undertake sufficient practice.

We can tailor a training program to suit the driver's experience and it may be staggered over several months.

Eurasia is renowned for training new drivers. 2009 British F3 race winner and Red Bull driver, Daniel Ricciardo, states "Eurasia gave me the best possible grounding and training which has allowed me to develop into a truly competitive driver".

Book early to avoid disappointment.

F3 TESTING

Any driver looking to compete in any F3 series World Wide needs to test, test and test in F3 in order to become competitive. Drivers new to F3 can benefit from F3 Testing in our Championship winning Dallara 304 cars at the Sepang Circuit. Get yourself up to speed at a fraction of the cost of testing in Europe or Japan. It will save you money and impress F3 Teams when you get on the pace and give good feedback in your first test with them.

British Formula Ford race winner, Chris Maliepaard, reported after four days running with us at Sepang “I learnt so much in the four days and as a result I know I will be able to set competitive times as soon as I start testing in Europe.”
